Mary Anne is outspoken and not afraid to question the status quo. She likes to create positive turbulence that motivates new kinds of thinking and helps set strategy. She is also a tough coach who is willing to take the gloves off, even when giving feedback to senior management. Mary Anne directs the firm's Divisional Masters Program and usually serves as the face of Interactive Communications in speaking and marketing efforts. Her role as marketing director also provides her with numerous opportunities to exasperate Claudia with far out ideas.

Prior to co-founding Interactive Communications, Mary Anne worked for Citibank where she held a variety of positions including Sales Director for the 330 branches of the New York Bank during the introduction of investments into the product line, and as the Business Director of Citibank's telephone sales center. Before Citi she worked in direct sales for health care and for the Psychology Department of the University of Vermont where she did research on motivators of change.

Mary Anne holds a BA from the University of Vermont and an MBA from New York University's Stern School of Business. In her free time, she works with disabled children at Blythedale Children's Hospital in Westchester and enjoys her extended family. She lives in Croton-on-Hudson, New York, spends as much time as possible at her house in Vermont, and is most creative on the chair lift.
